LIMITED MEETS A LIGHT ENGINE NEAR DOMINGO HEAD ON KILLING ONE

Engineer J. W. Green Succumbs to His Injuries an Hour After Fatal Crash and Fireman Flowers Will Probably Die From Severe Scalds: Accident Happened on Double Curve as Heavy Train Was Crossing Trestle: Fifteen or Twenty Passengers and Trainmen Sustain Injuries but Most of Them Are Minor: Probable Locomotive Was Running on Fast Train's Time: Relief Train Brings Sufferers to Albuquerque Hospitals: Steel Cars Prevent a Heavy Loss of Life.

INDIAN HERDER RACED TO PREVENT CATASTROPHE BUT WAS TOO LATE

Domingo, N. M., June 9.—One man was killed and fifteen or twenty persons injured, more or less seriously, in a disastrous wreck, which occurred at 10:40 o'clock this morning on a gentle curve a mile and a half west of Domingo, when the California limited Santa Fe train No. 3 and a light engine, No. 365 collided head on.

J. W. Green of Las Vegas, the engineer on the light engine, was the man killed. He died an hour and forty minutes after the wreck, having been terribly scalded about the face and head and having sustained severe internal injuries.

His fireman, William Brennan, of Las Vegas, escaped unhurt. George Selover, of Las Vegas, engineer on the limited, sustained a badly bruised leg, and injuries about the body. R. C. Flowers, fireman on the limited's engine, was badly scalded and he is the most seriously injured of any with the exception of Green. He will likely die.

The wreck occurred on a double curve, where it was impossible for the engine men on either engine to see either coming until they were only a few hundred yards apart.

According to all information obtainable at this hour, the light engine was running on No. Three's time in an effort to make Domingo siding before the limited reached there. The trainmen say that the board was clear at Domingo, as the limited passed, and that that train was only 12 seconds behind time at Domingo Station.

There were 45 passengers on the limited and probably 25 on the light engine at the time of the crash. The limited was carrying a heavy load of freight and passengers. The light engine was carrying a load of freight.

When the crash occurred, the limited was running on the double track and the light engine was on the single track. The limited was running on the fast train's time and the light engine was running on the slow train's time. The crash occurred on a gentle curve and the limited was running on the fast train's time.
